Examining Economies WEEKLY UPDATE - OCTOBER 8, 2018

Although new data continued to show strength in the U.S. economy, markets stumbled across the globe last week.^[1] The S&P 500 lost 0.98%, the Dow dropped 0.04%, and the NASDAQ declined 3.21%.^[2] International stocks in the MSCI EAFE struggled, posting a 2.35% loss.^[3]

While U.S. and international stocks followed similar paths last week, data is beginning to show that our economic outlooks may be very different for the moment.^[4]

U.S. Strength in a Growing International Divide

The latest labor report helped underscore some of the differences between the U.S. economy and the rest of the world. While the data missed the mark for new jobs added, September marked the 96th-straight month of job growth - and the lowest unemployment level since 1969.^[5] The report pushed interest rates higher, which contributed to last week's equity losses.^[6]

However, when describing our economy, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell said it is experiencing "a particularly bright moment."^[7]

Global Growth Adjustments

At the same time, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) indicated that it would decrease its global economic growth predictions. The IMF hasn't downgraded its forecasts since 2016. Currently, more risks are beginning to emerge - from trade tension to political challenges in Europe.^[8] In particular, the rise in oil prices, the U.S. dollar, and interest rates are hurting emerging economies.^[9]

HSBC mirrored this divide, cutting its global economic outlook while upgrading U.S. numbers.^[10]

A Look Ahead While Looking Back

As the labor market tightens, inflation could rise - bringing even more interest rate hikes from the Federal Reserve.^[11] While rising rates bring their own set of risks, they are ultimately a sign that the economy is growing. On the other hand, when the Fed lowers rates, they do so because the economy is slowing.^[12]

This week, we mark the 11th anniversary of the markets hitting their highest pre-recession point on October 9, 2007.^[13] At that time, hopes that the Fed would lower rates again contributed to the new record highs.^[14] In the ensuing months, the Dow lost more than half its value as the Great Recession began.^[15]

While markets were down last week, they were still far ahead of their highs from 2007. The Dow closed at 14,164.43 on October 9, 2007 - and ended at 26,447.05 on October 5, 2018.^[16]

Investors have experienced quite a ride in the past 11 years, but the market's long-term growth is undeniable. Risks are here, as they always are. But we are here to help you understand and navigate those risks, no matter what the markets bring.

TAX TIPS

Is It Time for a 'Paycheck Checkup'?*

That big tax return may have allowed you to pay bills, build your savings, or buy something you've wanted for some time. With passage of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act in late 2017, the tax code changed, making potentially for an even rosier tax picture for some at the end of this year.

However, the IRS urges taxpayers to get a paycheck checkup to ensure you don't encounter any surprises come time for tax filing early in 2019.

A paycheck checkup will help make sure your employer is withholding the correct amount from your paycheck. Go to <https://www.irs.gov/individuals/irs-withholding-calculator> for more information.

Here are some of the changes in the law that may affect your taxes:

- The act lowered tax rates and changed tax brackets.
- Standard deductions nearly doubled to $24,000 for joint filers and $12,000 for singles.
- The act eliminated personal exemptions.
- The child tax credit is larger.
- The act added a credit for dependents who can't be claimed with the child tax credit.

The calculator may help you determine the best withholding level to suit your needs.

For more information about withholdings and other tax changes, go to <https://www.irs.gov/newsroom/tax-reform-resources>.

Other details may apply, and you can find more information on the IRS website.

GOLF TIP

How Do You Get Out of a Steep Bunker?

It's not just your normal course hazard. It's a bunker, with high walls and often filled with sand.

If your ball lands in a bunker, you're faced with a dilemma: How do you get the ball to hop over the bunker barrier to go at least in the general direction of the hole?

1. Calm down. You can do it. This fate has befallen other players as well.
2. Analyze your predicament. Come up with an action plan. You can try to hit the ball high and hard so that it hops gently over the ledge in the direction of the hole. Or you can opt for a lower exit that might produce a cleaner break.
3. Be realistic. If your ball lies against a steep face over which you must knock the ball to get it going in the direction of the hole, then choosing another escape might be the best and more reasonable option.
4. If you do think you can get it to hop over the high wall, go for the long, slow swing. That means your backswing is going to stretch long to create a swing-through. Your clubhead speed will feel slower, which will produce a higher, softer shot, sending the ball hopping merrily upward and over the barrier.
5. Hold the club with the left wrist (for right-handed players) cupped, which means the back of your hand is closer to the top of your forearm than your palm.
6. As you swing (long and slow) release the clubhead as it moves through the sand so that you don't dig deep into the terrain with the club's handle leaning toward the target at the strike.
7. Climb triumphantly out of the bunker. At this point, you may perform a brief celebratory dance of victory.

Get Your Allergy Basics Right Here

Doctors call those annoying irritants - pollens, mold, animal dander, certain foods - "allergens."

Allergens, which by themselves are usually harmless, cause allergies; more than one in five Americans suffer from them.

Allergies occur when you encounter "triggers," which may involve inhaling, swallowing, or making skin contact with allergens.

Your body produces IgE, a protein to counteract the allergic reaction. The protein grabs the allergen, which causes your body to release histamine into your blood.

The increased histamine level produces the symptoms, which include:

- Itchy or watery eyes
- Sneezing
- Itchy or runny nose
- Feeling tired or ill

Symptoms of skin allergies include rashes and hives.

Treatment may involve taking antihistamines or decongestants. Nasal sprays also may help.

Doctors may prescribe an inhaler to manage allergy-induced asthma, or they may inject you with special antibodies to reduce symptoms.

Allergy shots help alleviate symptoms that don't respond to conventional treatment. Shots help target hay fever and allergic reactions.

Green Tips for Eco-Friendly Renovating

You've always been focused on environmental matters. You want everything you do to be eco-friendly. And now you want to do some home renovations. How do you renovate and remain earth friendly?

Here are six tips:

1. Reconsider adding space. More room doesn't necessarily make for more comfortable living. But it does add to utility and furniture costs.
2. Do an energy audit. Hire a professional to inspect your home for efficiency.
3. Hire a LEED-certified contractor. LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) certification helps you get the latest in green building practices.
4. Go with non-toxic paints. Low-VOC (volatile organic compounds) and Green Seal certified paints don't use the more dangerous solvents.
5. Get energy-efficient appliances. The "Energy Star" label on dishwashers and refrigerators directs you to the best and most eco-friendly choices.
6. Donate extra materials to local organizations, such as parks and recreation departments, schools, or other community organizations.
